This rhinoceros-like dinosaur is recognizable for its bulky body, bony neck frill, parrot-like beak and three horns. It probably used its horns to protect itself from predators and ward off mating rivals.

The Triceratops grew to about 30 feet long and was the most numerous plant-eating dinosaur during the late Cretaceous period (70 million years ago). It was hunted by the fearsome Tyrannosaurus rex.